

AUDIOLOGY, PH.D.

The Department of Communication Sciences and Disorders has a 60-year history of training academicians and leaders in the field in our Ph.D. programs. The department currently has excellent faculty who are developing their lines of research with aspirations of garnering external funding to support Ph.D. students during their training.

At this time, we are not admitting new doctoral students into the program. We hope to open admissions to students in the future. We will continue to update the status of our Ph.D. programs on our Website.